I am planning to join the call with NSS on Monday afternoon and am happy to discuss the alternate language below sometime before that call. I may be somewhat delayed in responding to email, but I will be checking throughout the days.

RADM Brown/Nicole-

Spoke with (b)(6)-P.L. 86-36 today. We are on the calendar to meet on Friday. She has her staff pulling together their thoughts on the plan for what needs to be done on this study. She requested that we meet Friday so that she would have time to review their initial thoughts before coming into our meeting. She had conflicts on Thursday that pushed us to Friday. I plan to use this time to capture ours as well. I hope to send something around tomorrow to make sure I have our position and scope well understood.

On a side note, (b)(6)-P.L. 86-36 had mentioned a couple times that she understood how busy my schedule is and would understand working around it. [Redacted] (b) (5)

[Redacted]

I'll forward to you what I put together on scope and will let you know how the meetings go. Please let me know if you have any questions or guidance in the meantime.

Thanks,
Brendan

I am pulling together charts for our discussion with DOE next Wednesday. Our time slot is 09:45 – 11:00.

The following summarizes some high-level, key talking points that I am using a basis for pulling together the charts. Let me know if you think I have missed anything. I hope to have draft charts ready to send out to this group this evening.

DOD Expanding Contractor Cybersecurity Program

Pilot program that shares threat information with defense contractors, network providers has stopped hundreds of intrusions, DOD says.

A Department of Defense (DOD) program that shares cyber-threat information with defense contractors and their network providers has already stopped "hundreds of intrusions" in its 90-day pilot phase, the deputy secretary of defense said this week.

The DOD soon plans to expand its Defense Industrial Base (DIB) experimental program--which currently has 20 participants--to the remainder of the industry base, as well as "key areas of critical infrastructure," deputy secretary of defense William J. Lynn told attendees Tuesday at the Defense Information Systems Agency (DISA) Customer and Industry Forum in Baltimore.

Forrester's Guide to Process-Driven Business Transformation and Application Delivery

Discover how to use Agile methods to rapidly deliver both business process and application change.

A transcript of his talk is available online.

The DOD launched the program, in which the agencies also work with defense contractors to use the threat information in a practical way to stabilize their networks, in June.

"By furnishing this threat intelligence, we are able to help strengthen these companies' existing cyber defenses," Lynn said Tuesday, adding that the pilot "also appears to be cost effective."

In his speech, he reminded people that the program is voluntary, and stressed that it does not violate anyone's privacy because the feds are not "not monitoring, intercepting, or storing any private sector communications."

Lynn also elaborated a bit on the specific work being done in DIB to prevent intrusions. He said that those participating are loading malicious code signatures that have been gathered by previous intelligence efforts onto existing systems to increase their cybersecurity effectiveness.

"In this way, the DIB Cyber Pilot builds off existing capabilities that are widely deployed through the commercial sector," he said.

Lynn did not name the current participants in the program, and a DOD spokeswoman declined to name them at the time when the program was revealed. However, a published report in the Washington Post released at that time identified AT&T, Verizon, and CenturyLink as participating Internet service providers, and Lockheed Martin, CSC, SAIC, and Northrop Grumman as participating contractors.

DIB is a collaborative effort between the DOD and Department of Homeland Security (DHS), but the National Security Agency is providing technical advice and cybersecurity information upon request by the DOD.

The Obama administration has been proactive in its efforts to work with the private sector on a host of technology fronts, and cybersecurity is a key area of collaboration. The DHS, for instance, already is sharing cybersecurity intelligence with some private-sector CIOs through another program launched last year.

In case you missed his speech yesterday, General Alexander (head of NSA and the US Cyber Command) told 4,000 people that the US Cyber Command will test a program of sharing classified attack signatures with private industry if those organizations can protect the sensitive data. That sharing will enable private organizations to set up early warning and filtering systems that are as up to date as the systems that protect DoD networks. Very cool.

TOP OF THE NEWS

--US Legislators Plan to Re-Introduce Bill to Allow Seizure of Websites (February 16, 2011)

US lawmakers plan to introduce legislation that would expand the authority of government agencies to shut down web sites that traffic in piracy or counterfeit merchandise. Legislation with the same goal was introduced last year, but the Senate did not take action on the Combating Online Infringements and Counterfeits Act, which would have granted the US Department of Justice (DoJ) the authority to shut down websites that were committing copyright infringement. Some suggested changes to COICA include a cap on the number of domain seizures DoJ could request before paying ISPs for the cost of compliance and using domain name seizures only when other, less restrictive measures are untenable.

[Editor's Note (Schultz): The suggested changes would make this bill more palatable. As written, its provisions simply give DoJ too much power without much recourse on the part of individuals who are suspected of wrongdoing.]

--Spain Approves Anti-Piracy Legislations
(February 16, 2011)

Spain's parliament has approved a law that would allow authorities to shut down websites involved in illegal download of pirated entertainment content. An earlier version of the bill was defeated. The new bill established a panel to hear complaints against the sites suspected of engaging in content piracy. A judge will make the final decision in all cases.

A cyber attack left at least two Canadian government agencies temporarily disconnected from the Internet. The government has not made any statement beyond acknowledging an "attempt to access" government computer networks. The systems at Canada's Finance Department and Treasury Board were both taken offline as soon as the attack was discovered in early January; they have been slowly returning connectivity since then. The attack has been traced to IP addresses in China, but the Chinese government has denied responsibility.

--Feds Domain Raid Accidentally Targets Popular FreeDNS Subdomain
(February 17, 2011)

A US government agency operation aimed at taking down web sites that traffic in child pornography accidentally included moo.com, a popular shared domain, in a group of targeted domains. People who tried to visit the affected websites were instead redirected to a web page with a notice from the US Department of Homeland Security's Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and the Department of Justice (DoJ) warning them that possession of child pornography could result in a lengthy prison sentence. The sites were taken down on February 11. The suspension of moo.com was lifted by the evening of Sunday, February 13, but FreeDNS, which runs moo.com, said it may take up to three days to fully restore websites.

--Oracle Releases Java Update

(February 16 & 17, 2011)

Oracle has released an updated version of its Java runtime environment to address at least 21 security flaws, 19 of which could be exploited to allow remote installation of software on vulnerable machines. Users are urged to install Java 6 Update 24 as soon as possible; there are updates available for Windows, Linux and Solaris users. However, some observe that Java has "by some accounts ... surpassed Adobe applications as the most exploited software package," and suggest uninstalling it from computers.

The BBC has confirmed that two of its radio streaming websites were infected with a malicious iframe tag designed to infect the computers of visitors to those sites. The problem was dealt with as soon as the BBC learned of the issue.

--Sony Threatens to Ban Jailbroken PS3 Console Users from PlayStation Network

(February 16 & 17, 2011)

Sony says it will permanently ban users of jailbroken PlayStation 3 (PS3) gaming consoles from the PlayStation Network. Sony has not said how it plans to enforce the new policy. The announcement comes just weeks after code to jailbreak PS3 consoles was posted to the Internet. The code allows users to play "homebrewed" games on the devices, but with a few changes, could also be used to allow the consoles to play pirated games. The action stems from a legal case against George Hotz, who allegedly posted the code; Hotz is facing charges for violations of the Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA) and other offenses.

--Man Netted US $8 Million in Modem Dialing Scheme

(February 16, 2011)

Asu Pala has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit computer fraud and other charges in connection with a scheme that infected people's computers with malware that forced their modems to dial premium rate phone numbers. Court documents indicate that Pala hired developers to create the malware, which was tested and deployed by other co-conspirators. The scheme was ongoing between 2003 and 2007 and earned Pala nearly US $8 million. It is believed to have affected at least 250 people from Germany and possibly other European countries. Pala was charged and entered his guilty plea last April, but the case was just recently unsealed. He is scheduled to be sentenced on February 28.

--Microsoft Investigating Reported Zero-Day Flaw in Windows Server Message Block

(February 15 & 16, 2011)

Microsoft is investigating a report of a zero-day flaw in Windows Server Message Block (SMB) that could possibly be used to hijack vulnerable computers. The individual who disclosed the flaw also posted exploit code. There have been claims that the flaw could be exploited to create denial-of-service conditions on or take complete control of machines. However, according to a Microsoft Security Response Center blog, the flaw does not allow remote code execution on 32-bit systems and they are testing 64-bit systems, on which a successful exploit would require having at least 8GB of contiguous virtual address space mapped.

Nicole,

Julia just informed me that Greg "will not" be available (leave) on Dec 13th.

The invite went out this morning and acceptances are coming in.

Will Bobbie (other) stand in for Greg?

Suggest we continue as scheduled.

Could you please send to this distro both the draft memo and the cover letter? I definitely don't have the final version of the cover memo that went to NPPD with the memo.
