U.S. Department of Commerce Privacy Impact Assessment U.S. Census Bureau CEN18 Enterprise Applications

Unique Project Identifier: 006-000401700

Introduction: System Description

(a) a general description of the information in the system;

The CEN18 Enterprise Applications system is the functional management framework used to deliver applications to end users of the U.S. Census Bureau network. The CEN18 Enterprise Applications system includes several applications that maintain or collect personally identifiable information (PII). These applications are:

- an enterprise-level data tracking system;
- a general support system for internal data management,
- a transaction-based system
- a relational database management system, and
- a concurrent analysis and estimation system (CAES),

Some examples of survey and census information maintained by this system are personal names, personal addresses, personal contact information (telephone numbers, email address), business information, occupation, medical information, tax information, etc. The systems reside in Census Bureau's Bowie Computing center. The components that collect PII/BII do not reside in the cloud.

(b) a description of a typical transaction conducted on the system;

The purpose of the enterprise-level data tracking system is to ensure data consistency, data integrity, and generate meaningful data information through data management, tracking, and reporting for Census Bureau collections.

The general support system for CEN18 provides internal data management within the Census Bureau collections. This system allows users to request access to datasets, and when approved, users are granted access to the datasets within a secure environment provisioned by the system. Census Bureau datasets are for internal use by employees, and are capable of containing protected or administrative information.

The transaction-based system within CEN18 serves as the primary mechanism for operational control across surveys for data collection. The system can be considered an operational brain that determines operational workflow based on pre-existing protocols.

The relational database management system stores and retrieves data as requested by other software applications. This system provides both a testing, development and production environment for optimum functionality.

The CAES serves as the enterprise-wide analytics platform for surveys and censuses. This system allows statisticians within census and survey projects to perform statistical models using census and survey response data, paradata, administrative records, and many other types of data. The system will receive PII including Identifying Numbers, General Personal Data, and Work-Related Data. The PII is received from other information systems that collect, maintain and disseminate Census and Survey data.

(c) any information sharing conducted by the system

The enterprise-level data tracking system does not share information.

The general support system shares information within the Census Bureau by querying indexed metadata and by sending email to data owners, administrators, and other application users.

The relational database management system does not share information.

The transaction-based system shares demographic survey, Decennial, and Economic Census information within the Census Bureau and with the Department of Commerce, that is used to determine new survey content, support electronic collections, for statistical purposes, and to create datasets for the Census Bureau.

The Concurrent Analysis and Estimation System (CAES) is an environment for use by researchers to make decisions during the data collection phase of a survey or a Census. The CAES system will provide the researcher with any data that they request as input and will output and send decision based data only to other systems. This could include things such as case level intervention codes, a stop work decision, or best time of day to contact respondents. CAES does not provide a mechanism for sharing PII/BII with other systems.

(d) a citation of the legal authority to collect PII and/or BII:

The legal authorities to collect PII and/or BII for CEN18 are:
